Faculty wants tenure restored

By CHARLES BLOMLEY

Florida College faculty members have been at loggerheads with the Florida College Board of Trustees over the past year over the question of tenure. The board, which consists of five members, is charged with the responsibility of overseeing the college and its operations. The current tenure policy, established in 1983, provides for the appointment of full-time faculty members on a tenure track and sets the standards for the award of tenure.

The board has been criticized for not providing adequate protection for faculty members, who have often been denied tenure, even though they have met the criteria set forth in the policy. The faculty has argued that the policy is outdated and in need of revision. The board, on the other hand, has defended its position, arguing that the policy is necessary to ensure the financial stability of the college.

The issue of tenure has been a source of conflict between the board and the faculty for many years. The faculty has been particularly upset by the lack of support from the board in their efforts to improve the quality of education and student services. The faculty has also been critical of the board's decision to cutbacks in funding, which has led to cuts in faculty positions and programs.

Sewer system being scoped

By JOE HALE

The city of Panama City has been working on the sewer system project for several years. The project aims to upgrade the existing system to meet the needs of the growing population. The city has been working with engineering firms to design and implement the project.

The project involves the replacement of old, damaged pipes and the installation of new ones. The city has been working with local businesses and residents to ensure that the project is completed as efficiently as possible. The project is expected to be completed by the end of the year.

Baptists face dilemma with Baylor University

Several years ago, I was stuck in a traffic jam with a friend. He said, "You know, I've always wanted to be a Baptist." I thought it was funny because he wasn't raised in a religious family, but he always had a curiosity about being a Baptist. I asked him why he felt that way and he said, "I just like the idea of being a part of a community that values charity and selflessness." I could see the passion in his eyes and it made me wonder what it would be like to be a Baptist myself.

I started researching the history of the Baptist denomination and was fascinated by the stories of early Baptists who were willing to stand up for their beliefs. They were a group of people who believed in individual freedom and equality, and they were willing to fight for those values even if it meant going against established authority. That's something that resonated with me.

I decided to join a local Baptist church and I've been attending services ever since. It's been a great experience so far. I've made some really good friends and I've learned a lot about my faith. I've also taken part in some community service projects that I'm really proud of.

But recently, I've been facing a dilemma. I want to continue my education and I'm considering attending Baylor University. I know that Baylor is a prestigious school and it has a strong reputation for academics, but I'm not sure if it's the right fit for me.

As a Baptist, I value education and the pursuit of knowledge. I want to continue my studies and I'm considering majors in history and political science. But I also want to remain true to my faith and I'm not sure if attending Baylor would be the best way to do that.

I've been talking to some ministers and they've told me that it's possible to balance both faith and education. They've encouraged me to take some religious studies classes and to get involved in the Baptist community on campus. But I'm still unsure.

I know that going to Baylor would be a great opportunity, but I also want to make sure that it aligns with my values as a Baptist. I need to find a way to reconcile my two passions and I'm not sure how to do that.

This is just one of the dilemmas that I'm facing as a Baptist student. I'm not sure if I want to go to Baylor, but I do know that I want to continue my education in a way that is true to my faith. I'm still thinking about it and I'm open to any advice or guidance that I can get from other Baptist students or ministers.

Carthage shocked Marshall, 79-77

The Carthage Bulldogs and the Marshall Mavericks met in a thrilling basketball game, with the Bulldogs emerging victorious with a 79-77 win. The crowd was on their feet throughout the game, cheering for both teams.

The Bulldogs scored the opening basket, setting the tone for the rest of the game. Marshall fought back, but Carthage's defense was too strong. In the third quarter, Marshall tried to make a comeback, but the Bulldogs held strong and maintained their lead.

In the end, Carthage proved too much for Marshall, with players such as Jeff Damatta and Kade Richardson leading the way. The game was a classic example of how hard work and determination can lead to victory.
