Big risks do not always accompany big rewards

By BILL GOODWIN

An assessment shows that many people make decisions based on the size of the risk rather than the potential rewards. In some cases, the large risks are not associated with the larger rewards. For instance, there may be situations where the risks are minimal but the rewards are significant. Conversely, there may be instances where the risks are high but the rewards are low.

Lifestyles Deadlines

Engagement announcements should be turned in no less than 2 weeks before the wedding, marriage announcements no more than 6 weeks after the wedding.
