Network bias questioned in war coverage

For weeks now there has been the assumption by some members of the media that the public right to know what is happening in the world is being obscured by the way news is filtered through the network newsrooms. The networks are accused of being biased toward the views of the United States and its allies. This was one of the points made by Edward F. Jones, a former network newsman who now teaches at the University of Texas at Austin.

"Network newsrooms have a tendency to downplay or ignore stories that are not favorable to the United States," Jones said. "This can lead to a distorted view of what is happening in the world." He cited examples of this bias in the coverage of the war in Iraq, where the networks emphasized U.S. military successes and downplayed the role of other countries.

Jones said that network newsrooms often rely on government sources for their information, which can lead to a lack of critical thinking and a failure to question the motives of those sources.

"The networks are not doing their job," Jones said. "They are not providing the public with a balanced view of the world." He called for changes in the way news is reported by network newsrooms.

"We need to see more coverage of the views of other countries," Jones said. "We need to see more coverage of the impact of the war on civilians." He said that network newsrooms should be held accountable for the way they report the news.

Bakker sentence too extreme

Sen. Jim Jeffords, a Vermont Republican, said Wednesday that he believes former Christian Coalition leader Pat Robertson should not have received a sentence of 14 months in prison for interfering with the 2002 presidential election.

Robertson was sentenced to 14 months in prison in February for interfering with the election of Sen. John McCain, an Arizona Republican, and Sen. John Kerry, a Massachusetts Democrat, who were running for president.

Jeffords said that he believes Robertson should have received a shorter sentence.

"I think the sentence was too harsh," Jeffords said. "I think Robertson should have received a lighter sentence." He said that he believes Robertson should have received a sentence of six to 12 months in prison.

Senate approves school funding reform plan

The Senate approved a school funding reform plan Wednesday that would provide $10 billion in new funding for education programs.

The plan, sponsored by Sen. John Breaux, a Louisiana Democrat, and Sen. Ben Cardin, a Maryland Democrat, would provide $10 billion in new funding for education programs.

Breaux said that the plan would help ensure that all students have access to a good education.

"This is a commonsense approach to a problem that has been troubling us for too long," Breaux said. "It is time to make education a priority again." He said that the plan would help ensure that all students have access to a good education.

Cardin said that the plan would help ensure that all students have access to a good education.

First Things First

By YdA CREEK

The funeral director was just being over accommodating. "We can do it your way, Mr. Smith. No problem."

Mr. Smith died last week and was a man of few words. "His last wish was to be buried in a simple casket, no flowers, no music, just a quiet, peaceful goodbye," his family said.

"He lived a long life and he had a full life," his wife said. "He didn't want a fuss. He just wanted to be laid to rest in peace and quiet."
