Storytelling festival on tap

Long, tall tales

The South is rich with stories and legends. And there’s no better way to experience them than at the upcoming storytelling festival. This event will be held on Saturday, May 15, at the Panola College Amphitheatre. Doors open at 6 p.m., and the storytelling begins at 7 p.m.

In addition to the storytelling, there will be a variety of food vendors and craftspeople selling their wares. The cost is $10 per person, with a discount for groups of 10 or more. All proceeds will go to local charity. Don’t miss out on this opportunity to hear some great stories and support a good cause.

Texas Utilities examining options

The state’s largest electric utility is considering several options for its future, including renewable energy and battery storage. The company has set a goal of reducing its carbon emissions by 2030, and is looking at ways to meet that target.

The utility has already invested in wind and solar projects, and is exploring other renewable options. However, the company is also aware of the challenges associated with the transition to a cleaner energy future. A decision on its course of action is expected in the coming months.

School financing resurfaces

Richards reveals her plan

On the campaign trail, Mayor Richards has said that her administration will focus on improving the city’s educational system. She has pledged to increase funding for schools and to work towards closing the achievement gap.

“Improving education is one of my top priorities,” Richards said in a recent interview. “We need to invest in our schools and provide our children with the tools they need to succeed.”

Richards has also said that she will work to diversify the city’s tax base in order to reduce the property tax burden on residents. She has proposed implementing a new sales tax on services in order to generate additional revenue.

Local ISDs blast latest funding plan

Several school districts in the region have expressed frustration with the governor’s latest funding plan. The plan includes cuts to education funding, which local officials say will harm their ability to provide quality education for their students.

“With these cuts, we simply won’t be able to provide the kind of education our students deserve,” said one school board member. “We’ll have to make tough decisions about which programs to cut.”

The plan is expected to be signed into law by the governor in the coming weeks. It is likely to face significant opposition from educators, parents, and community leaders.

Questions are in the minds of area residents and educators alike regarding the impact of the plan. For now, the focus is on keeping our classrooms open and providing our students with the best possible education.

Underpayment penalties waived in 1992

The amount of income tax withheld from employees was not made public until recently, raising questions about the accuracy of payroll deductions. Federal courts have struck down laws that might require such withholdings, but the new law waives penalties for underpayment of the withholding tax.

Choice hangs on circumstance

Law outlines rules for office succession

The details of the law are complex, but the gist is that the rules for office succession vary widely depending on the circumstances. For example, if a term expires, the person in office must vacate the position immediately. If a term begins before the expiration date, the person in office may serve the entire term.

Flying High
For Mitchell Hall, piloting a plane is a dream come true

By LUCIA MOLER
For most people, pilots an airplane is a dream. But for Mitchell Hall, it has been a reality for years. As a pilot for a local airline, Hall spends many hours in the skies, often charting courses over the beautiful landscape of east Texas.

Hall's interest in aviation began at a young age. "When I was younger, I always wanted to fly," he said. "I guess it was just something I was born to do." Hall began his training as a student pilot while still in high school, and eventually earned his license.

Hall's journey to the cockpit began with a small single-engine plane. "I started with a Cessna," he said. "It was small, but it was enough to get me started." As he gained experience, Hall moved on to larger airplanes, eventually becoming a commercial pilot.

Hall's passion for flying has not waned over the years. "I still love it," he said. "There's nothing like being up in the air, feeling the wind on your face and looking down at the world below." Hall said that the most rewarding part of his job is helping others reach their destinations safely and efficiently.

Hall's dedication to his craft is evident in his hard work and dedication to his craft. "I take pride in my work and always strive to do my best," he said. "I want my passengers to feel safe and comfortable, and I know that my hard work makes a difference in their lives." For Mitchell Hall, piloting an airplane is not just a job, it's a dream come true.
