Woods, Penn. say they fought salt water well

Panola County, Fish Water District board members Joe Woods and Bill Woods Jr. said they have been fighting salt water four months to prevent an abandoned oil well from pumping salt water into their wells. Jim Woods, a member of Lake Martin Water District board, said the water in his well had a foul smell.

Woods say they are in the first stage of the well, namely to stop the salt water from entering the well and to determine if the water is safe to drink. They are also working with local authorities to find a solution.

Dear张贴者:
I am a huge fan of your column and enjoy reading your thoughts on various topics. I recently learned that the Lake Board of Directors is discussing the possibility of implementing a new set of policies and procedures for the management of Lake LM and its facilities. I am concerned that these changes could negatively impact the quality of life for the residents and visitors of the lake, as well as the environment.

I would like to propose the following ideas that I believe could help address these concerns and contribute to the continued success of Lake LM.

1. Community Input: It is crucial to involve local residents and stakeholders in the decision-making process. This will ensure that the new policies are tailored to meet the specific needs and desires of the community.

2. Environmental Sustainability: The lake and its surrounding areas are a precious resource. Policies should prioritize the preservation and enhancement of the lake ecosystem, while also considering the leisure and recreational needs of the community.

3. Transparency and Accountability: The Lake Board should be transparent in its decision-making processes and be held accountable for the outcomes of its decisions.
