Farm Bureau opposes BTU tax

The Panola Watchman

Panola County Farm Bureau members recently met to discuss the Senate Budget Committee’s recommendation to approve the Senate Ways and Means Committee’s tax bill which would result in the loss of the BTU tax. The BTU tax is currently scheduled to expire in 1994.

The committee has not yet received a letter from the Governor opposing the Senate bill. The BTU tax is a state tax on the production and transportation of coal, oil, and natural gas that has been in place for the past 10 years. The tax is used to support the state’s education system and other public services.

The BTU tax is expected to generate approximately $900 million in revenue for the state each year. The proposed bill would reduce the BTU tax by 60% over the next two years, and then eliminate it completely in 1994.

The Farmers are concerned about the potential impact of the proposed bill on their ability to pay for education and other public services. They believe that the BTU tax is an important source of revenue for the state and that it should be maintained.
