1993 in review

A look back at the year's events

January

The beginning of 1993 saw many changes at the North Carolina Police Officer's Association. After years of being without representation, the association was finally granted recognition. A few weeks later, the association's first president, Postmaster General James E. Mapp, was named to his position.

February

Pamela College received the news for a new president in the form of Dr. William E. Johnson, who had recently accepted the position. Dr. Johnson had previously served as the president of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and was well-respected in the academic community.

March

The City of Durham received a large grant from the U.S. Department of Education to develop a new comprehensive educational program. The program aimed to improve educational outcomes for all students and was funded by a $5 million grant.

Phone charge supports hotline

A few people on long distance phones thought they were being charged too much for their calls. However, a new hotline was established to provide support and information to those who believed they were being overcharged. The hotline was sponsored by the American Telephone and Telegraph Company (AT&T).

March

A group of local high schoolers made the most of the last few days in winter vacation to play a game of touch football on the campus of Caroga High School.

News briefs

Local man found dead

The body of a local man was found dead in his home. The police had been called to the scene by a neighbor who had noticed the house was unlit.

Students head back to school

The doors of Caroga High School swung open once again for the new school year. Many students were excited to return and start the new term.

Holiday closing

The Caroga High School football team was scheduled to play a home game on the last weekend of the year. The school closed early so the team could have a full day of practice before the game.

Virus hits community hard

Flu-like illness crowding doctors offices

By LAURA HOFER

It may not be the flu, but the symptoms of the virus are strikingly similar. Local residents are feeling sick and seeking medical attention. Several cases have been confirmed in the area.

Local public health officials are advising people to wash their hands, stay home if they are ill, and avoid close contact with others. The virus is spread through the air and can be transmitted by coughing and sneezing.

Local churches and synagogues are holding special services to pray for the health of the community. The local hospital has set up a dedicated hotline for individuals who may have been exposed to the virus.

The virus can cause a mild flu-like illness, but some cases can be severe. People are urged to seek medical attention if they develop symptoms such as fever, cough, or difficulty breathing.

For vital infections, however, there are no medications that can be used.

The New Year Is Not Just Pretty Pictures On A Calendar

The calendar upon the wall
Presents a brand new scene;
It's the first day's, as you recall,
With twelve months in between.
Each coming month is filled with days,
Like this one just begun.
With ample time to mend our ways,
While getting something done.
Whatever be your choices now,
Keep God and ask
That He reside the help you'll need
And guide you with each task.
So near that January's here,
Seem to do your part
In making sure this brand new year
Recesses a flying start.
