PC renovation work to begin
Project cost estimated at $650,000

Work on the old Garfield building could begin as early as Monday, as Panama City Public Schools prepare to renovate the building's interior. The school board recently approved the lease of the property to the city for $1, and the school will be occupied by fall. The project is expected to be completed in September.

Brene Bonifield, chairperson of the building committee, reviewed the school's design plans and scheduling opportunities with the board. "It was nice to see them," she said.

The former state office will be renovated to accommodate office space and will be named the Panama City High School science building. The building will house the current science and math programs and the proposed academic degree granting program.

Based on the bid received last week, Bonifield noted that the total cost of the project could be around $650,000. Panama City College president Dr. William Bonifield estimated that the project would require the purchase of new equipment and construction and would cost around $650,000.

Cocaine, marijuana concealed in van

Texas Department of Public Safety agents found more than $400,000 worth of illegal drugs concealed in the side panel of a 1992 Buick Regal on Monday afternoon.

Texas state troopers stopped the car at a border checkpoint near the Kansas City, Mo., and Colorado line Monday on Interstate 25. The driver, a 33-year-old female from Vista, Calif., was arrested on suspicion of possession of marijuana and cocaine.

The drugs were concealed in a compartment that was not accessible to the driver or the passengers. The driver was found to be in possession of marijuana and cocaine.

Coke truck closed temporarily

Although construction of Garfield High School's new gym is progressing, some students and teachers may notice their schedule change. All of Garfield's gym classes are now scheduled to meet in the 1992 Buick Regal

On Monday, the school's coke truck was closed temporarily due to a scheduling conflict. The truck, which is parked outside the school, is used by students to purchase soda and snacks during lunch hours.

The school board has authorized the use of the truck to provide students with an affordable source of food and drinks. However, because of the scheduling conflict, the truck will remain closed until further notice.

Local students attend Texas Lions camp

Two Corpus Christi students recently attended the Texas Lions Camp in Corpus Christi, Texas. The camp is designed for children who have been diagnosed with cancer and provides an opportunity for them to engage in activities that promote physical, emotional, and social well-being. This year, the camp provided more than 200 children with the opportunity to participate in a variety of activities such as swimming, arts and crafts, and sports. The camp is made possible through the support of the Texas Lions Club, which has been providing children with cancer with the chance to grow and develop since 1929.
Working women combining family, careers every day

Women have always worked. Farming alongside their husbands, and turning the crop into food and clothes for the family. Maintaining a household before the invention of washing machines and microwaves. Caring for the sick and the aged. Teaching and raising children. For so many thousands of years, the role of women has been as wife, mother, and dutiful daughter, taking on whatever tasks were necessary for the welfare of her family.

And in some ways, things haven’t really changed that much. Women are still providing for their families, maintaining a household, and raising their children. The difference is in the many opportunities women have to do those things.

At the turn of the century, a married woman was expected to take care of her children and her husband; her husband was expected to support them. Women who worked outside the home were usually unmarried or widowed – the schoolmarm, the housekeeper, the nurse, the maidservant, the clerk, the factory worker. They worked to support themselves, often.

But now, women are working, because the stereotypes were never really true: women always worked, although that work was not always recognized and appreciated.

The difference is that opportunity exists to make choices – to study any subject, to pursue virtually any career, to marry and raise children, to make a home. And one choice does not automatically rule out the others.

This section is intended as a salute to working women, whatever their goals.

Future job market shows opportunities for men, women

Careers possibilities are more open now than ever before for working women, and the outlook is bright for now and the future.

Women are playing a greater role in the workforce today, and their diversified roles are equally attractive in both sectors.

"We’re moving out of the stereotypic," says Betty Blythe, dean of student services at Panola College. "It used to be in the past that women were not admitted to certain fields of study. I think we’re seeing a change. There is more and more openness to women attending college and getting a career.

Women used to be seen as less skilled, less capable. Now we see them as equal to men in every field.

In fact, women are playing a greater role in the workforce now and will be in a greater role in the future. Women are more likely to be in positions of authority and leadership. More women are going into fields that were once considered unattainable.

"Of course, we have women who are in nursing, and women who are in teaching and law. I think the stereotype has been a barrier for some time. But now, without working on the traditional positions of men and women's jobs, I have had no trouble finding a good job or finding the job that I was interested in.

Women are playing a greater role in the workforce now and will be in a greater role in the future. Women are more likely to be in positions of authority and leadership. More women are going into fields that were once considered unattainable.

Small businesses offer opportunities

Women are starting businesses at twice the rate of men and they are expected to own one third of all American businesses by the year 2000, according to Patricia Sollitt, administrator of the U.S. Small Business Administration.

LIPRC female roustabouts breaking career molds

By SHERLIN KADY

When Opportunity knocked, and she knocked, Debbie Doody decided to hook up with the LIPRC fieldwomen to break the mold.

Debbie Doody is one of the many LIPRC female roustabouts who are breaking into the male-dominated oilfield traditionally closed to women.

Doody, who has worked for Donco Kwik Delivery for 6 years, took the plunge in 1989 when she was first hired by the company as a dispatcher.

She had already worked in the office for 1 year and had decided to do something different. She had heard of the LIPRC fieldwomen and the opportunity they could offer.

Doody said she had not been offered a position as a dispatcher when she applied for the job. She said she was told it was a "man's job."

But Doody decided to go for it and was hired as a dispatcher. She said she was not ready to leave the office because she was comfortable there.

Doody said she was surprised when she was hired as a fieldwoman.

She said she was happy with her decision to become a fieldwoman and said she would continue to work in that capacity.

She said she was working on a new project and was happy with the progress she was making.

At-home mom full-time job for Carthage woman

While she term "working women" usually applies to those who work outside the home, the women who make the decision to leave their family and go out to work for the first time are dealing with a different set of issues. These women are not only working for wages, but also for the well-being of their families. They are facing the challenges of balancing a full-time job with the responsibilities of being a mother.

Lynnette Mudd, a 37-year-old mother of three, is one of these women. After years of stay-at-home motherhood, she decided to go back to work full-time. She now works as a teacher's aide at a local preschool.

"I have always wanted to teach," she said. "When I had my kids, I knew I wanted to keep them involved in learning, but I also wanted to be involved in their education."

Lynnette found a job that allowed her to work flexible hours, which was perfect for her needs. She now teaches two classes, one in the morning and one in the afternoon.

"I love being able to work with the children," she said. "It's such a rewarding experience."

Her job involves helping the children with their homework, playing games, and doing crafts. It's a lot of work, but she loves it.

"I feel like I'm making a difference in their lives," she said. "It's so rewarding to see them learn and grow."
Many jobs, multiple responsibilities for Williams

You might see her in a classroom, behind a desk, or walking down the hall. Perhaps you’d see her quietly working alongside her husband on the restaurant floor, or maybe you’d catch her whenever you find an Williams one doing something unexpected—she’s simply busy. Hardly noticed when she was a child in her hometown of Panola, she’s now a co-owner and manager of the restaurant that bears her family’s name, Terry’s. What started out as part-time work at her family’s restaurant has turned into a career that has brought her success and a sense of fulfillment. "I have spent a lot of hours and a lot of days behind the counter," she says. "I can handle the additional tasks at the restaurant because I have the knowledge and experience." Modal special events. She finds that her career at the restaurant gives her the ability to handle these events as well as other responsibilities. "I have the confidence to make decisions and run the restaurant effectively."}
