Grover files restraining order on election ballot

State Capital HIGHLIGHTS by Lendell Williams & Ed Sterling

U.S. Senate or a House of Representatives is an unusual place for a lawyer to be involved in the redistricting process. In this case, Grover has apparently decided to build the case on the basis of the original redistricting process.

A 12-15 or 16-12 Senate race might be more appropriate for Grover. The Senate was the last of the House of Representatives to hear the case, and Grover has apparently decided to build the case on the basis of the original redistricting process.

As of late Thursday, all efforts to contact Grover for comment have been unsuccessful. Grover is known to be a man of few words, and his refusal to speak on the issue is typical of his approach to politics.
