Lawmakers consider shorter penalty
Superintendents have mixed feelings on 'no pass, no pay'

By LAURA NEIGER

The year after a five-year effort to end "no pass, no play" may be marked by mixed feelings among officials of the state's three dozen school districts concerning the law that has been on the books since 1980.

At least one superintendent, however, is happy to see the end of the law, which he considers a "Stop sign for the whole state" that has been a major headache for school districts.

"The law is a disaster," said United School District No. 103 Superintendent Dr. Charles Towner, who said the law had caused significant problems for the district in recent years.

"The law has been a disaster for us," Towner said. "It has been a major headache for us and our teachers."

Towner said the law has caused problems for the district in recent years, including the need to hire additional staff to handle the increased workload.

"The law has caused a lot of problems for us," Towner said. "It has caused a lot of problems for our teachers and our students."

The law, which requires students to have at least a passing grade in all their classes to participate in extracurricular activities such as sports, has been in effect since 1980.

Panola County founders began a road system
Know Your Heritage by Leila E. LaGrone

I have been mentioning before that the earliest people who lived in the area of Panola County were native Americans. Some of these native Americans lived in the area for thousands of years before the white man arrived.

When the white man arrived, the Indians were living in small villages. They grew their own food and made their own clothes. They also traded with other tribes and with the Spanish for goods.

The first white man to live in Panola County was John Young. He built a house near the town of Youngsville. He lived there for a time before moving on to another place.

Panola County has a rich history. It is full of interesting people and events. If you are a resident of Panola County, you should know your heritage.
