Concealed weapons made law

By SHERRY KOONCE

For the first time in over a century Texas will have the opportuni- ty to carry a concealed weapon for their own self-defense, the Ju- nior Statesman,a publication of the Junior Statesman Club, a group of 10th, 11th and 12th grade students at the University of Texas, reported. The group said that the law will be a step forward in the fight for individual rights in America. "We want to see that everyone has the right to carry a weapon for their own protection," said the group.

But for the next step, the group explained, is to get a number of people applying for a concealed weapon permit. The group plans to work with the sheriff's office to make sure that the process is as easy as possible.

For the group, they explained, the law is a step forward in ensuring that everyone has the right to carry a weapon for their own protection. "We want to see that everyone has the right to carry a weapon for their own protection," said the group.

First Things First

By TELA BOOS

During the recent storms and rains, the St. Johns River rose to record flood levels. In the Panola area, at least 30 people were rescued from their homes. The floodwaters continued to rise, but by the time it crested, the water level had significantly decreased, allowing most of the affected areas to dry out. In response to the flooding, the Panola County Emergency Management Agency activated its emergency plan, and local officials worked tirelessly to ensure the safety of residents and provide necessary assistance. The floodwaters caused significant damage to infrastructure and properties, but the community remained resilient. As the waters receded, residents began the process of cleaning up and assessing the damage. The county has received federal and state assistance to aid in recovery efforts. In the meantime, the community continues to support one another, offering help and resources to those in need. The resilience of the Panola community is evident in their determination to overcome the challenges presented by the flood.
