The county auditor announced that the county will receive a 9% decrease in its revenue from the state due to a decrease in the value of real estate. This decrease is expected to result in a reduction in the county's budget, which may require adjustments in services and programs.

Edmonson: State’s investment in community college pays off

By LAURA MEINRICH

The Edmonson County community college system has grown from a small program of classes with a few students to a large facility with more than 1,000 students enrolled.

The college was founded in 1959 as a branch of the University of Kentucky and was later expanded to include two additional locations in Bowling Green and Franklin.

The college now offers associate degrees in a variety of fields, including business, health sciences, and education.

The college has also implemented several programs designed to help students succeed, such as academic support services and career counseling.

The college’s success is a testament to the benefits of investing in community colleges, as they provide access to higher education for a diverse range of students.

The college’s growth is expected to continue, with plans to expand its facilities and offer more programs in the future.

The college’s success has also helped to revitalize the economy of Edmonson County, as graduates from the college often choose to stay and work in the area.

The college’s success is a reminder of the importance of investing in education and community colleges in particular.

Pine beetle forecast looks good

While the nation just walks in the same direction, the Show Me State is off to a strong start. The recent trend towards the past few years, with its higher temperatures, has done nothing to slow the attack of the pine beetle. The pine beetle, which has been a pest in the state for many years, has been causing a lot of damage in the woodland areas of Missouri. It is a threat to the state's economy and the environment.

The recent trend of slower growth and a decrease in the number of beetles is not expected to continue for long. The beetle's life cycle is short, and it is expected to be at its peak for another few years. However, efforts are being made to control the beetle's population, such as the use of pesticides and the planting of beetle-resistant trees.
