Chapman endorses Sandlin

U.S. Senator Sam Chapman, Republican from North Carolina, has endorsed state Senate candidate Sam Oliver, Democrat, in the upcoming North Carolina Senate race. Chapman made the announcement at a press conference held at the Chapman campaign headquarters in Raleigh.

Chapman said he believes Oliver is the best candidate for the job and will work hard to help him get elected. He also praised Oliver's record in the House of Representatives, where he has served for the past eight years.

"Sam Oliver is not just a good candidate, he's a good man," Chapman said. "He's worked hard for the people of North Carolina, and I'm proud to endorse him in the upcoming Senate race."
Let's send some old fashioned common sense to Washington, Let's send Max Sandlin to Congress

If you're looking for someone who believes in changing Washington rather than running from it and who will promote the real values and good commons sense, here is a boy - you need look no further than Max Sandlin.

Max believes that Washington could use some old fashioned common sense. He supports tax reform, small business, reduced spending and some tough choices in government.

Count on Max to:
- Promote tax reform
- Support small business
- Fight for the rights of the average American
- Create programs that ensure safety in the classroom

If the law can stand up in the court room against whatever it is that we are here to do, this is the way we have to do it. The law is not what we do, but what we do is the law. If we can stand up and be counted, we have nothing to fear. We are here to protect the people who we represent and to do so with the dignity and respect that we have been taught.
