Doctor played critical role

By Linda K. Lattimore

Editor's note: This is an excerpt from the author's book, "The Making of an Entrepreneur." The book is available at most local bookstores.

When Larry got to the hospital, he discovered his wife, Emily, was in labor. He was in shock, but he knew what to do. He had been chosen to deliver the baby, and he wasn't going to fail.

The hospital was a disaster. The nurses were overwhelmed, and the doctors were helpless. But Larry was determined to save his wife and their baby.

He knew he needed to get to the hospital as quickly as possible, so he grabbed his car and drove as fast as he could. When he arrived, he found Emily in a delivery room, with the baby struggling to be born.

Larry knew he had to act fast. He had to get the baby out of Emily's womb and onto the floor. He couldn't let her suffer any longer.

He grabbed a pair of scissors and made a cut in Emily's belly. The baby was born.

But it wasn't over yet. Larry had to make sure the baby was okay. He had to make sure Emily was okay, too.

He called for an ambulance, and the nurses helped him get Emily to safety. Then he checked the baby again, just to be sure.

The baby was alive, and so was Emily. Larry knew he had done it.

He hugged Emily and the baby tightly, and he knew he would never forget that day.

He had saved a life, and he had saved a family. That's the kind of hero he was.

First Things First

By Tula Blythe

When the sun rises over Carthage, the sound of birds singing fills the air. The town is alive, and the people are busy.

Today, I decided to take a walk in the park. It was a beautiful day, and I felt a sense of peace.

As I walked, I saw a young couple holding hands. They were walking slowly, enjoying each other's company.

I thought about my own relationship. It's been a long time since I've been in love like that.

I wished I could find someone to share my life with, someone who would accept me for who I am.

As I continued my walk, I saw a group of kids playing soccer. They were having so much fun.

I remembered my own childhood. I loved playing sports. It was one of the few things that made me happy.

I miss those days. I wish I could go back to that time and relive those memories.

But I know I can't. I have to move on and find happiness in the present.

I decided to go home and read a book. It's one of my favorite things to do.

I hope you all have a wonderful day. Remember, life is too short to waste on anything that doesn't make you happy.
