PCAD, Water Board discuss Murvaul Lake lease dispute

By David Humphries

A standing-room-only crowd greeted a joint meeting of Panacea City’s regional District Board and the Panama City-citizen’s water users group PCAD Thursday afternoon.

The purpose of the meeting was to discuss the pending dispute over lease fees for Murvaul Lake. The District Board had decided to raise the lease fees by $35,000 per year.

PCAD had expressed the board's concern about the increase, saying it was a potential hardship for water users.

In January, Judge Joe Chronis issued a ruling supporting the opposition of District’s move and the appeal to the Florida Supreme Court was granted.

At the meeting, Judge Joe Chronis ordered the opposition to go forward. The District’s appeal was scheduled for December and if it is successful, the case will be sent back to a lower court.

The dispute stems from the fact that the District is required to pay a lease fee for the lake to the county, which in turn pays the property owner.

The District’s move was seen as a way to reduce the cost of water for its users. PCAD argued that the increase would be unfair to those who rely on the lake for water.

The meeting was attended by both representatives of PCAD and the District Board. The discussion was heated, with both sides expressing their views.

The meeting ended with a call for a future meeting to discuss the case further.
