Fred Lugano hates holes

As a general contractor with a passion for woodworking, Fred Lugano spends a lot of time planning and designing projects. He enjoys the process of turning his ideas into reality, and he takes pride in the quality of his work.

However, Lugano also has a fear of holes. He is particularly nervous about the thought of having to work with pipes or conduits that go through walls or floors. This fear is so intense that he often avoids projects that require him to install plumbing or electrical systems.

Lugano's fear of holes is not uncommon. Many people have phobias that can affect their ability to perform certain tasks. It's important to recognize these fears and find ways to overcome them. In Lugano's case, he might consider seeking the help of a professional to help him work through his fear of holes.
