Boot Scootin’ owners to comply with restrains

Reprieving themselves in your front Pte, local business owners West and Beverly Henderson decided to opt in to a temporary operating permit as they face mounting expenses and rising demand for services due to the ongoing pandemic. The duo, well established in the community, will be operating under a set of regulations aimed at ensuring the safety of their customers and staff.

The permit allows for limited capacity and social distancing measures to be in place. It also requires the use of face masks and the implementation of sanitization protocols. The Hendersons hope these measures will help them continue to provide quality service to their customers while adhering to the guidelines set by the authorities.

With the increase in demand, the owners are optimistic about the future. They believe that with the correct precautions in place, they can continue to serve their community effectively.

Money scan injected

If it sounds too good to be true, it probably is. The company that claims to be able to instantly identify counterfeit money is being investigated by the FBI.

The money scan system allegedly allows the company to scan and authenticate banknotes in seconds. However, the company has been accused of using false information and manipulating bank notes to make them look authentic.

The FBI is currently investigating the company and has opened an inquiry into the alleged fraud.

The company’s claim to instantly identify counterfeit money has been met with skepticism from financial institutions and law enforcement agencies. The FBI’s investigation is expected to provide more clarity on the company’s claims and practices.

Dolls give children comfort

THE PANOLA WATCHMAN

What could make a 25-year-old single mom so happy? A new baby! Crystal Nevels of Carthage is one of those women who received a new baby this past Thanksgiving. Nevels was overjoyed with the surprise and said she would do anything to make her baby happy.

"I've been through so much. I've been homeless, I've been in jail, but now I'm doing better," said Nevels. "I'm happy because I have a baby."

Nevels was one of several mothers who received a new baby from the Carthage Children's Advocacy Center. The center is a nonprofit organization that provides services to children who have been abused or neglected. The center also provides support to the families of these children.

The center received a grant from the Carthage Foundation to purchase and distribute new baby items to families in need. The grant was provided to the center by the Carthage Foundation, a private foundation that supports local nonprofits.

"The grant was a great opportunity for us," said center director Sandy Mosley. "It allowed us to purchase and distribute new baby items to families in need."

The center distributed a total of 20 new baby items to families in need. The items included clothes, diapers, and formula. The center also provided information on how to access additional resources for families in need.

"We are grateful to the Carthage Foundation for their support," said Mosley. "It will make a big difference in the lives of these families."

The center is always looking for ways to support families in need. They are currently accepting donations of new baby items. They also welcome volunteers to help distribute the items.

"We are always looking for volunteers," said Mosley. "It will make a big difference in the lives of these families."

The center can be contacted at 662-325-2222 or info@cacar.org. The center is located at 401 W. Main St., Carthage, Texas.

Panola College, TSTC cooperating in joint registration

Panola College and Thomas State Technical College in East Central Texas are working together to offer joint registration for students in the area. This program, which began in the fall of 2017, allows students to register for classes at either institution during the same session.

Joint registration provides students with the opportunity to enroll in classes at either college without having to travel between campuses. This can be particularly beneficial for students who live close to both colleges and who are juggling family and work responsibilities.

Students can register online or in person at either college. Information about the joint registration program can be found on the websites of both colleges, or by contacting their admissions offices.

The joint registration program is just one example of the ways that Panola College and TSTC are working together to support students in the area. Other initiatives include dual enrollment programs, transfer agreements, and collaborative projects on campus.

For more information about joint registration or other collaborative initiatives between Panola College and TSTC, please contact the offices of the presidents of each college.
