Curriaga High School has lost two of its students, Melissa Rolod and William Barlow, during the past year. Melissa Rolod was at the school's basketball game last night, when she was killed by a batter. William Barlow was at the school's football game last night, when he was killed by a ball.

We have received reports of two new students attending Curraga High School this year. They have been transferred to the school from other schools in the county.

Catholic Charities and other agencies that have assisted the victims of the fire have been requested to provide assistance to the victims. The church has also been asked to provide a place to live for the victims.

The Contemporary Hardware back was almost bare, but not a single customer was waiting in line to make a purchase. The store was open, but no one was in the aisles looking at the shelves. The hardware store had been closed for several weeks due to the COVID-19 pandemic. The store owner, Jim Bobo, explained that he had been unable to reopen until the recent lifting of restrictions. He said that business had been slow since then, but he was hopeful that things would improve soon.

Parents face fines for truants

Punishment not just for kids

Parents, beware. The stakes are high when it comes to truancy. According to state law, parents can be fined up to $500 and charged with a Class C misdemeanor if their child is not in school and if the parent fails to cooperate with school officials to address the issue.

The Texas Education Code states that parents have a duty to ensure their children attend school regularly. If a child is found to be truant, the school district must notify the parent and provide a written report of the child's attendance. If the parent fails to respond or does not remedy the situation, the district can initiate legal action to seek fines and other penalties.

According to a recent report by the Texas Education Agency, more than 12,000 students in the state were truant last year. This number is up from the previous year, when approximately 10,000 students were reported truant. The report also found that truancy rates were highest in urban areas, particularly in large cities such as Houston and Dallas.

The report calls for increased efforts to address the issue of truancy, including better communication between schools and parents, and more support services for families in need.

HEAVEN ON EARTH

When you're out of love, you can't help but think about heaven. I mean, who wouldn't want to be with their loved one again? But the reality is that love is fleeting. It's not something that we can control or predict. And the thought of heaven can sometimes feel like a consolation prize. It's not enough to just know that our loved ones are in a better place. We need to be able to remember them in a way that makes us feel happy and at peace.

So how do we do that? Well, one way is to create a space in our home that is dedicated to our loved one. This could be a special corner in a room, or a small altar in a closet. Whatever it is, make sure it's somewhere that you can visit whenever you need to remember them.

Another way is to practice gratitude. When you think about your loved one, take a moment to reflect on the good things they did in their lifetime. Think about the ways they made the world a better place. This can help you feel closer to them even though they are no longer here.

Finally, remember that love is not just something that we feel in this life. It's a force that connects us to the universe and to each other. So even though your loved one may not be physically present, they are still with you in spirit. And that's something to be grateful for.
