Water hasn’t ‘cleared;’ clean-up is promised

The City of Carthage recently announced that water supplies in the area have not yet cleared after the recent heavy rains. The city has been working to improve water quality, but it is expected that it will take several more weeks for the water to clear completely. The city has also urged residents to boil water before drinking it until the water quality improves.

New building record is set

A new building record has been set in Carthage. The icing plant, which is currently the largest in the county, has been completed and is now operational. The plant is expected to help meet the county’s demand for ice.

County faces lengthy agenda

The county commission has a lengthy agenda for its next meeting. It includes items such as a drainage project, a road construction project, and an update on the county’s financial status.

Majority votes for; but it’s not enough

The majority vote for a new school building was not enough to secure the necessary funds. The county commission is expected to revisit the issue and consider other options for a new school.
