Four years long enough

President Carter's recent statement at a rally in the U.S. Senate revealed much of the problems with the Carter administration. He expressed his regret that he had not sufficiently explained his policies, thereby causing confusion and misunderstanding among the public. This admission highlights the need for better communication from the government to ensure that citizens are well-informed about ongoing policies and their implications.

You and your Money

By Michael J. Gamarro

If you have been following the recent events in Washington, D.C., you may have heard about the so-called "fiscal cliff." This refers to the potential for government spending cuts and tax increases if Congress fails to reach a deal before year-end. The outcome of these negotiations could have significant implications for your financial situation. It is crucial to remain informed and prepared for any changes that may come.

Feds restricting coal use

In a recent speech, President Obama highlighted the need for reducing coal use and increasing the use of renewable energy sources. The administration has been working to implement policies that support the transition to cleaner energy. These efforts are being met with resistance from the coal industry, which argues that it will cost too much and harm their bottom line.

Out Of The Past

From the files of the Pamela Watchman

In the early days of television, news programs were broadcast live from a studio. This was before the days of recording and playback, so any mistakes or mishaps were on-air. The first such incident occurred on the NBC network in 1945, when a reporter forgot to turn off the microphone before leaving the studio.

Fun Festival makes money for Tatum

The Tatum Junior Women's Club held its annual Craft Fair and Picnic on Saturday at the Midwest Town Mall. The event was sponsored by the club and was held to raise funds for local charities.

Fun Festival, held in conjunction with the Children's Hospital and Cancer Center, was attended by hundreds of people. The event featured a variety of crafts, games, and activities for children and adults.

The festival included a bake sale, silent auction, and live music. Many local businesses donated items for the auction, which raised money for the Children's Hospital. Local musicians performed throughout the day, with the Festival Band playing the annual Children's Hospital benefit.

The festival was a huge success, with thousands of people attending. The Tatum Junior Women's Club is looking forward to holding another successful event in the future.
