Making hay: it isn’t easy

CLUCK POWER

With the recent increase in fuel prices, hay has become a more expensive commodity for farmers. According to the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA), the average price of hay in the U.S. increased by 10% in 2022. This has forced farmers to consider alternative strategies to produce their own feed, such as using cluck power.

Cluck power, also known as bird feeding, is a method of producing feed for livestock using poultry. It involves providing a diet rich in protein and energy that is consumed by chickens, turkeys, or other poultry. The poultry then excrete the undigested feed, which can be collected and used as a feed source for other livestock.

One of the benefits of cluck power is that it reduces the need for high-quality feed, which can be expensive. It also reduces waste, as the poultry produce nutrient-rich manure that can be used as fertilizer.

However, cluck power requires proper management to be effective. Farmers must provide the right diet, ensure proper sanitation, and monitor the health of the poultry to prevent disease.

In conclusion, while cluck power is a promising alternative to traditional feed production, it requires careful planning and management to be successful. Farmers who are interested in this method should consult with a veterinarian or agricultural expert to ensure they are using best practices.

SFA ok’s record budget

Sunset Pool, Carthage, Mo.

The State Fair Association (SFA) has approved its largest budget to date, with a total of $831.3 million allocated for the 2023 fair. This budget will be used to fund the construction of new facilities, improvements to existing buildings, and the expansion of the fairgrounds.

"We are excited to see the growth of our fair," said Jim Smith, President of the SFA. "Our goal is to continue to provide the best possible experience for our visitors and ensure that the fair remains a landmark event for the state."

No pat answers
Presidential contender's debate, General Eisenhower, revealed another one of his "no pat answers". This is the kind of debate that one is not going to see a lot of in the future. Eisenhower is a man of the people, and he is not afraid to tell it as he sees it. The President's view on important issues is often more liberal than that which is generally accepted by the public.

It's time for a moratorium

By Anthony Koppelson

The environmental movement has been in the news recently, with several cities and states implementing new regulations to reduce pollution and protect the environment. This has led to concerns about the impact on businesses and the overall economy.

Out Of The Past
From the Files of the Panda Woman

In the 1930s, the U.S. government implemented the first national parks, including the Grand Canyon and Yosemite National Park. These parks were established to protect the natural beauty of these regions and provide a place for people to enjoy the outdoors.

Faith calls for moral action

Nicodemus might have understood the true nature of the kingdom of God better than the other disciples. He was not afraid to stand up against the Pharisees and start questioning their practices. He was a man of faith and courage. The other disciples, on the other hand, were afraid to speak out against the Pharisees. They were afraid of the consequences of their actions. Nicodemus was not afraid of the consequences of his actions. He was willing to risk everything for his faith. This is what faith calls for - a willingness to stand up for what is right, even if it means facing consequences. We too must be willing to do the same. We must be willing to stand up for our faith, even if it means facing consequences.
