Bush-chacking regulations

March 12, 1980

The man with the most to gain from a change in the Bush administration's regulations for the logging industry is President Carter, who is facing a tough re-election battle. If he is re-elected, it is likely that the Bush regulations will be changed to suit him. However, if he is defeated, the regulations will remain in place. The regulations were designed to protect the environment and prevent the over-exploitation of federal lands. The Bush administration has been accused of ignoring these regulations and selling off federal lands to the highest bidder. The regulations are also opposed by the timber industry, which has been lobbying heavily to have them changed. The administration has been accused of being influenced by the timber industry, which has donated heavily to their campaign coffers. The regulations are supported by environmental groups, who believe they are necessary to protect the environment. Uncertainty in job freeze

March 12, 1980

The goal of President Reagan's pending freeze on federal spending is to give a sense of job security to his workers. The Freeze would mean that the government would be able to cut back on its spending and a whole year of pay would be saved. The Freeze would also give a sense of job security to the workers. Although the administration has stated that the Freeze would mean that the government would be able to cut back on its spending and a whole year of pay would be saved, there is still some uncertainty about the Freeze. The government has stated that it would be able to cut back on its spending and a whole year of pay would be saved, but there is still some uncertainty about the Freeze. Why ban formaldehyde?

By Fred Spinks

March 12, 1980

The reason for banning formaldehyde is multifaceted. Although it is a useful and cheap chemical, it is also a known carcinogen and has been linked to a variety of health problems, including asthma, cancer, and birth defects. The ban on formaldehyde is a step in the right direction, as it will prevent the chemical from being used in the manufacture of products that are known to cause harm.
