Move is really a homecoming

By Vic Parker

Though it wasn't much of a move, it was a move. They didn't move to a new city or state, but they did move to a new home. The old house was sold, and they bought a new one. It's not like they were moving to another country or anything, but it's still a big change.

It's funny how much it feels like moving to a new home. It's not just the physical move, but the emotional one too. It's like a fresh start, a new beginning. And it's not just the family that feels it, but the pets too. The cats and dogs are usually the first to notice the change.

The kids are excited too. They get to explore a new neighborhood, make new friends, and try new restaurants. It's not just about the house, but about the whole experience.

It's also a great opportunity to make some changes. Like new furniture, new decorations, and new colors. It's like a fresh start, a new beginning.
