Unforgettable

Background Music: Afternoon "By Night," by Duke Ellington, played on the Carthage Radio Reader's Radio at 104.9 FM.

Dear Readers,

This week's column will focus on the memories of a particular event that occurred many years ago. In the fall of 1958, I attended a school assembly where the principal announced a special event: a live performance by the Carthage High School orchestra. While the event itself was unforgettable, the memory of that day is even more vivid.

As the day approached, anticipation built among the students. The bulletin boards were decorated with posters advertising the performance, and the audience couldn't wait to hear the music. On the day of the event, the school was buzzing with excitement. Students dressed up in their finest clothes, eager to make a good impression.

The highlight of the performance was a piece by Beethoven, which I recall vividly. The melody resonated throughout the gymnasium, and the orchestra's performance was nothing short of extraordinary. The audience was mesmerized, and a standing ovation followed the final notes.

This event not only left a lasting impression on me but also instilled a love for music in many of my classmates. It was a moment of shared joy that brought the community together. Whenever I think back to that day, I am filled with nostalgia and a sense of gratitude for the experience.

As I write this column, I am reminded of the power of live music to connect people and create unforgettable moments. Whether it's a school assembly, a concert, or a simple gathering with friends, music has the unique ability to bring us together and create memories that last a lifetime.

Wishing you all a wonderful week,
