Beavers practice engineering without a degree

Beavers create what looks like man-made piles from ash.

Those McElroy beavers are remarkable creatures.

It is reported that by the careful building of mounds of earth, bees, gravel, pebbles, and pipes, beavers create structures that are truly remarkable. These structures are not just for housing, but also for protection against predators and changing water levels.

McElroy's beavers are considered to be particularly impressive, not just because of their size, but also because of their ability to adapt to changing conditions.

They are able to move large quantities of earth and gravel, and can build dams and lodges that can withstand heavy flooding.

McElroy's beaver lodge is located in a particularly exposed area, and yet it remains intact, thanks to the clever engineering of these remarkable creatures.

"Beavers are really clever animals," says McElroy.

Reagan describes tax package 'pro family'

Editor's note: This is the fourth in a series of stories by The Panola Watchman about the tax package that President Reagan signed into law last week. The stories are written by Melissa French, a reporter for The Panola Watchman.

The tax package signed by President Reagan last week is a major victory for the "pro-family" movement, which has been working for years to make the tax code more fair and equitable.

The package includes a number of changes that will benefit families, including a new child care tax credit, a higher standard deduction for married couples, and a new deduction for home mortgage interest.

"This is a major win for families," said Melissa French, a reporter for The Panola Watchman. "The changes will help families save money and provide them with greater financial stability."
